Unless there is a direct attack on our country or a direct threat to American allies and interests, the President is obligated to obtain congressional approval before attacking another country.

Attacking Libya sets a dangerous precedent and Barack Obama has overstepped his authority. Ironically, he vilifies responsible gun owners who at least know when it is and is not permissible to act in self-defense.

Tragically, we have more to fear from politicians abusing their power. They have more of it and the consequences are direr when they shoot without just cause.
